Mr William Casey

Dear Mr Casey

Some time ago, I wrote to you in the hopes of establishing a helpful contact with one of your colleagues. It was not possible at the time. I am writing again now to reaffirm my strong interest in an informal personal contact, which I am sure would be valuable.

Yours sincerely

Mr William Casey
Director of Central Intelligence
Central Intelligence Agency
Washington D.C. 20505

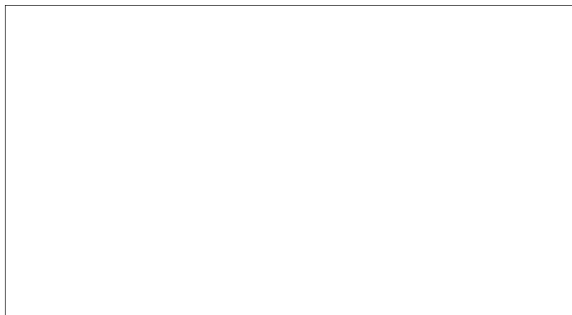

Dear Mr Casey

I hope you will not mind my writing to you directly with such a matter but I felt you would understand. As editor of The Economist's Foreign Report, I frequently publish information from and by the intelligence community. Some of it is said to originate from the agency; it comes into me, and I have no good reason to doubt its reliability. Some of Foreign Report's information comes from the agency's counterparts in other countries.

Since becoming editor 20 months ago, I have continued to believe that it would be of considerable value to have an informal contact, perhaps in London, which would help me to assess some of the information which I receive. I would hope that an informal contact would be beneficial to the agency from time to time.

I have made this request in a constructive spirit on four occasions through different channels. I am writing to you in the hope that you will agree that an informal and unofficial contact would be helpful.

Yours sincerely
